Commentary

The North American financial markets displayed incredible resilience given the number of geopolitical concerns that have come into play so far this year. There are many geopolitical concerns to monitor but the market has continued on a path to global economic recovery becoming more firmly entrenched. The performance of the DOW and NASDAQ has proven April to be the best month of the year to date.

The U.S. housing market and unemployment market continue to exert a drag on the U.S. economy. Other measures of economic activity including manufacturing activity and retail sales seemed to suggest that the economy continues to improve, albeit at a fairly modest pace. The question of whether this economic growth can become sustainable without the continued record levels of fiscal and monetary stimulus remains to be answered in the coming months and years.

The valuations of the companies in the portfolio generally remain at very reasonable levels when measured by price to earnings ratios and current dividend yields and this should continue to act as a major support at these current market prices. Many Canadian companies are reporting over the next month and most are expected to show continued signs of earnings improvement. The dividend income continues to be supplemented by income generated from the covered call writing program.
